

Prep Art

I popped in on a prep art class last week to see the children not only busily engaged in painting but actually painting to music, which was playing as a stimulus for their creative ideas. Students were using and mixing primary colours. They were being encouraged to think about and experience how music and art can be connected, as well as, think about the choice of colours and marks that communicate the mood and feeling of the music. It was a sight to behold!

